A PRIM ROSE SCHOOLS EDITION

July is upon us and with it comes the promise of great growth and change. As always, we had variety of events to provide our children with holistic development.

We believe that our value education classes should open the window for learning moral values for life, shaping the children as better humans in fact. To imbibe the values such as sharing, communicating and collaborating, the Carnival hosted by class VI children showed us how happiness could be spread even by our little hands.

Looking at the tender feet walking around the campus, we felt the necessity to preserve the environment around us and instill the same in our children. The students put on their creative cap and came up with innovative ideas to save their environment and competed on the occasion of World Environment Day. Seeing them I feel that our kids would take responsible steps to conserve the environment.

"The world owes its progress to the men who have dared to speak," and we at Primrose work together to give every child the right to speak. We had one such opportunity in, the Frank Anthony Memorial Debate Competition, where children shared their views on the topic "EDUCATION FOSTERS DEMOCRACY", the clarity of their thoughts, their tone of speech, the stage mannerism was the take away of the session.

Every child in Primrose is appreciated for attending school regularly and keeping good health. And to encourage a continuous robust health the Medical Camp conducted, helped our children and parents take precautionary measures reminding them that health is wealth.

Field tripppsss!!!!!! That's how my students utter it every time they hear these words. They came back happily narrating the arrangements of planets and stars from the Birla Planetarium and the fun filled time they had at Moosa Land. That indeed was the joy of learning, experienced by our Primbuds.

We welcomed the talent fest "Vasudha Vatsalya" as children from primary classes joyfully participated with enthusiasm. The dances of my children spoke the hidden language of joy, the fancy dress competition was a visual treat and their speeches awakened our spirits.

Leadership is the capacity to translate vision into reality, said Warren Bennis and we witnessed our school cabinet members pledging to bestow their duties to the best of their abilities. As they were conferred with badges and sashes they were reminded of their duties to the school and to the environment.

It was yet again, an amazing sight, seeing our students adorn themselves as international delegates at the PRIMROSE MUN. As delegates, they attempted to understand the issues from around the world and found realistic solutions. It was a moment of realization to know that teaching is a thousand acts of thoughtful instruction, guidance and encouragement that build upon each other to shape students and citizens of the world.

Hoping to get back with much more exciting and different activities the following month.

Regards

Principal.

CARNIVAL

The Class VI students organized a CARNIVAL as a part of their value education Project. The day was indeed a fun filled one with games, entertainment, and mouthful of snacks and above all a boisterous time with students, friends, and dear ones. The main aim of the carnival was philanthropic in nature and the kids supported it open heartedly.

It's was an opportunity to build a good rapport among the students, It gave the much needed break from studies and an opportunity to indulge in different activities and learn the art of sharing and doing business.

ENVIRONMENT DAY

Environment is everything that determines the life of us, the human being on this earth. World environment day is celebrated on 5th June every year declared by the UN General Assembly in 1972.

The students wrote slogans and drew pictures to create awareness among everyone about "Trees are our best Friends" and "Environment Conservation."

For our environment to change, there have to be small efforts made and each individual counts and can help in this initiative. So our children joined hands to protect the environment in saving the precious natural resources ensuring a healthy future.

Students reused old objects to convert it to green. Groups created innovative projects using an old pair of jeans, dustbin or even shoes and coconut shells. Our Director appreciated the kids and awarded them for their unique work.

SOUP AND ME

It was a cold afternoon, on probably a rainy day. I was about five or six years old and my mother was in the kitchen, making something, I figured out by the sound. I remember not caring, as I scribbled along, preoccupied by my crayons and storybooks.

It was after a short while my mom brought out three steaming mugs. One for herself, and the other two for my sister and me. At that moment, all my tiny five year old mind could grasp was that she had brought out some milk and I had to immediately cover my mouth or pretend that I was too concentrated on my (rather abstract) art.

And so I did that, shouting (in a muffled, high-pitched voice) , "Doodh nahi chahiye, NAHI BOLA NA!" ("I said I don't want milk!"). Calmly, she replied saying that it wasn't milk.

At that time, I didn't really have anything other than milk in a mug, also ...umm... Maggi of course. Which led me to assume that my mom had prepared Maggi for the both of us. Which led me to sitting up straight. Which again led up to my mother with her lightning-fast reflexes to stuff a spoonful of hot, red (not spicy) stuff into my mouth. I remember that moment like it was yesterday.

I was completely at loss. My first retort was to spit it out, but, being my mother, she was prepared for it and had kept the spoon close to my mouth. So I didn't spit. Instead I gulped it down, feeling the lumpy puree making its way down my throat. Excruciating with every second.

Cont...

She told me it was tomato soup, and that it was good for health (obviously). I made the dirtiest face possible to express my utter disgust of this alien-soup-thing (which I had heard of, before). My mom insisted it was good and turned to my sister, with a stare that expected her to say the same thing. Though I don't quite remember her answer. I refused to have, it but I had to, I had no choice either way. I guess I drank a glass of water after (partially) finishing the soup.

There have been many instances in which I was persuaded to have soup, not the same kind, of course. But to no avail. Almost every time we go to a restaurant, my family orders soup. And I never ate it, I give it a chance alright, but I never eat it.

I guess some part of me just doesn't like the idea of having half boiled suspended, floating, or sinking vegetables in a pool of slimy or grainy liquid with a tiny bowl on a stick (a spoon) that was designed to purposely have your chin dripping with its contents. I jUsT dOn'T gEt IT.

I'm not trying to say that I hate it, but rather I don't agree with it. Although, I must ask, have you heard of the time I realised I didn't exactly like mushrooms?
