A PRIMROSE SCHOOLS EDITION

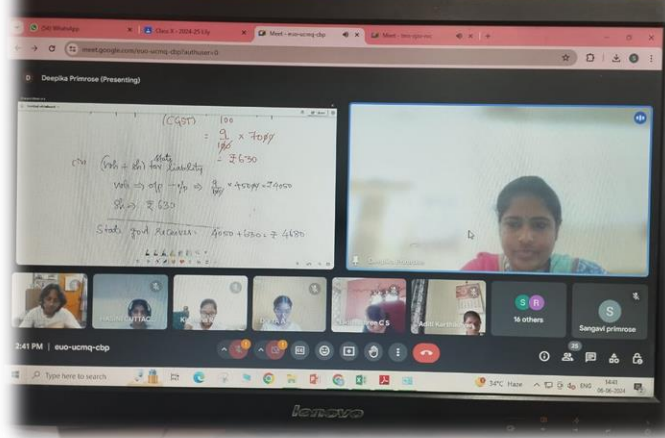

The conventional method of correcting children's unruly behaviour is physical punishment. However, a long-term favourable outcome can be achieved by approaching this in a positive perspective. During the conversation, our Principal Sir stated that the influence of positive approaches will bring positive change in a child's personality.

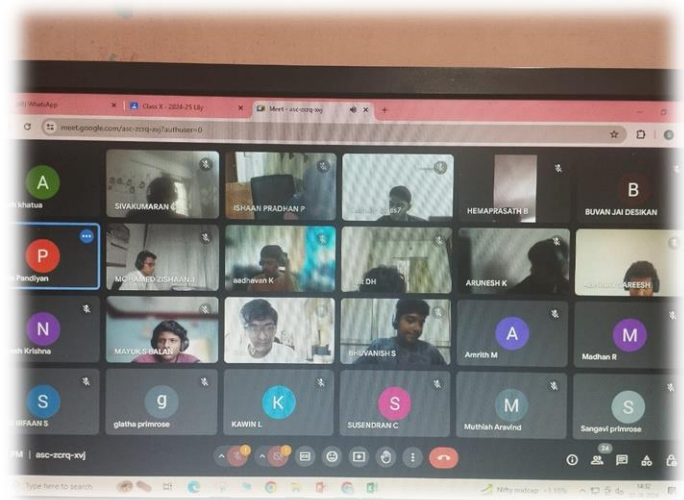

"As an educator committed to creating a safe and supportive learning environment, I recently attended a training session led by our Primrose Principal on the topic of corporal punishment. The session was enlightening and thought-provoking, providing valuable insights into the historical context, legal implications, and ethical considerations surrounding this sensitive issue" said one of the teachers.

LOST AND FOUND

It is a common fallacy among people that only things can get misplaced. But what about a Person? It may sound a bit peculiar and here's exactly what happened on fourth day of Navratri at Connaught Place, New Delhi. Shilpa was a six-year-old girl, a merry girl who likes to stay engrossed in her world of wax paintings. Uma was a single mother and Shilpa was her never ending source of pure joy and ecstasy which reflected through the unbreakable maternal bond between them. Hardly had she entered the crowded art shop of the market than she jumped with excitement and triumph. Her mother was unable to suppress her happiness at this wonderful sight. She gave Shilpa a fifty paise coin and let her buy one of the shining pieces of vividly colored artwork dipped in a blob of resin. This was the beginning of her nightmare, five minutes have passed by, seven... Nine... eleven... but Shilpa was nowhere to be seen. Uma's eyes widened out of terror, a wave of tension and apprehension blurred her vision. Even then, she battled her way through the monstrous army of people but it was too late. Shilpa was lost. Fear has now taken over, she hastily pushed everyone and screamed

"SHILPA! SHILPA! WHERE ARE YOU??"

No reply! as anticipated. The mother broke out into tears not being aware of the fact that Shilpa is safe and sound and in her own world of fantasies. She cried for help but people turned their deaf ear towards her. People do not realize other's pain unless they put themselves into other's shoes. Shilpa was exactly two blocks away from the paint stall, she turned back and was utterly surprised to see her mother was not there. Her weak and numb feet started to tremble. Shilpa heard her mother's muffled cries despite the enormous and gigantic crowd. It is none other than the eternal motherly love which brought them a step closer to re-union, both of them glanced at each other for sonic moments and Shilpa screamed.

LOST AND FOUND

"MUMMY!! I AM HERE"

Streams of an irresistible emotion started flowing from the mother's eyes, they both hugged each other, Shilpa still had that fifty paisa coin intact in her little hands, the intensity of the crowd had reduced. From a distance, I noticed a middle-aged man holding a canvas and replicating this scene in it with his magic paint brushes, what better gift could someone offer to Shilpa than the canvas of her mother and herself meeting once again after a dreadful scenario which can never be bought with merely fifty paise, for it was priceless.
